

LEARNING TO PRESERVE

Volunteers participating in the Program for Avocational Archaeological Certification (PAAC) Annual Survey near Salida. The PAAC program allows Colorado citizens to obtain formally recognized levels of expertise in archaeology outside of an academic degree program.

The Mathews-Gothelf Mansion in Curtis Park currently undergoing restoration with support from the State Historical Fund (SHF). SHF is a grants program that awards funds to public and nonprofit organizations for the purpose of preserving and interpreting Colorado's historic architectural and archaeological resources.

History Colorado's Office of Archaeology and Historic Preservation (OAHP) distributes information to the public about the importance of properly preserving significant buildings, sites, structures, and objects that represent the prehistory and history of Colorado. This guidance includes scholarly context studies that aid in the evaluation of properties, brief "how-to" brochures, and verbatim copies of federal and state laws. Learning to Preserve is the annual update of the Office of Archaeology and Historic Preservation's master list for all literature available for distribution through this office. The most current versions of publications are available online, and are free to download.

Most documents are free: longer documents have fees assigned to cover the costs of printing and mailing. Please see page 2 for ordering information.
