DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Cornwall Apartments present an inviting, slightly flamboyant appearance, in an area of sober domestic structures on Capitol Hill. Its ornament of varied balconies, mouldings and balustrades bespeak a new cosmopolitan spirit and a certain gaiety in architectural conceit that was unknown to Denver in 1900. The building, in its original and excellently preserved condition, is Mexican Colonial in style, consisting of full basement, three stories of 21 dwelling units, and a roof garden.

The masonry structure is of pressed brick; the walls 18" thick. The brick walls are painted in pink with white trim on cornices and balcony brackets. A string course and decorative mouldings below the cornice are in a Moorish strap-work design.

The structure comprises a central core and three corner towers containing entries. Recessed bays between the square towers provide balconies supported by decorated columns with palmetto capitals. Balconies carried on heavily scrolled brackets appear on the corner towers. Window openings are arched or pedimented. The original wrought iron gates and railings of good workmanship protect the entries.

Originally a ball room was located on the roof in the north tower, the other towers containing "summer gardens", all connected "by promenades lined by palms and flowering plants". The present owner has placed a pent house apartment in the former ball room. A delightful garden room for use by tenants has been put into the southeast tower, and the promenades have been restored.

According to records maintained in the Western History Department, Denver Public Library the owner of the Cornwall Apartments W.T. Cornwall, was issued a building permit for construction of the apartment on March 27, 1901. Cost $40,000. On June 23, 1901 it was announced that the apartment was to be completed on November 1, 1901 at cost of $75,000. The apartment was described in the Rocky Mountain News as "The handsomest structure on the Hill".

BUILDER/ARCHITECT Walter Rice

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The architect of the Cornwall Apartments, Walter Rice, was the designer of many early apartment buildings "in the Spanish style". Rice was pre-eminently an engineer and inventor. He was chief Engineer for Corn Products Company, Chicago, Illinois before starting the practice of architecture in Denver. He contributed to the process of extracting corn syrup (Caro) by steam pressure. He planned the entire structural, mechanical and electrical engineering for his buildings which is demonstrated in the unusually heavy construction of the Cornwall structure. A secondary interest was his work on carburetor improvements to obtain increases in mileage for early automobiles.

Walter Rice travelled in Mexico and Guatemala before 1900 and his interest in Mexican colonial buildings is evident in the design and ornamentation of the Cornwall. He designed a number of churrigueresque ornaments which were produced in quantity for subsequent buildings. It is notable that the Cornwall was probably the earliest building in Denver to reflect a Spanish-derived architectural style. Earlier structures echoed north European and Victorian influences in the city. Twenty-five years after Rice's experiment with the Cornwall, Denver architects recommended that the "Spanish style" conformed most harmoniously to the climate and topography of the Colorado plain and urged its adoption in Denver buildings.

The owner of the Cornwall Apartments, W.T. Cornwall, came to Denver from Ohio and was an executive of the Denver Fire Clay Company and a developer of real estate. Mr. and Mrs. Cornwall made their home in the apartment which was known as the residence of socially prominent citizens. Mr. Bolliver F. Gillis, founder of the Park Floral Company, an art collector, connoisseur and a man of urbane tastes, made his home here for 30 years. On October 22, 1902 an event of social notoriety took place in the ball room of the Cornwall; Mrs. Cornwall entertained local society in honor of Carrie Chapman Catt, the historic advocate of the rights of women in U. S. politics.

Frederick R. Ross, head of the Library Commission, was manager of the Cornwall from the time of its opening. After the death of Mrs. Cornwall ownership passed to Cyrus Hackstaff and to Mr. and Mrs. Gary Wright in 1975. Mr. Wright is restoring the Cornwall to its original stylishness as a fine residence on Capitol Hill.
